TODDLER LEASH BABY WALKER

Sling can be easily utilized to assist the baby walking, or kid tether when our and about.

CLEAN

*Launder as cotton garment. Separate dark colors. Heat dry. Avoid steam clean.
*Metal rings provide better clutch, but may damage the washer tank if not handled properly. Fold the sling up and place it in a laundry bag is recommended when machine-washed.

WARNING

*Until you are comfortable using the sling, please do so only with assistance or while sitting on a soft surface.
*Take the baby out or protect him with both hands when he gets squirmy.
*Allow good airflow to baby's face.
*Baby's head and neck should not be curled forward pushing chin to chest as this can restrict breathing. A folded receiving blanket under baby's back can help prop him into the correct semi-reclined position.
* Be very careful balancing your body, especially when walking. Avoid wearing heels.

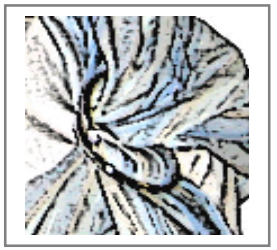
User Manual

Thanks for choosing Lite-on-Shoulder baby sling. You're about to discover the practical benefit of wearing your baby. Besides soothing the baby and relieving your sore arms, the benefit to your baby reaches far beyond that. With a little bit more practice and persistence you and your baby will both be amply rewarded.

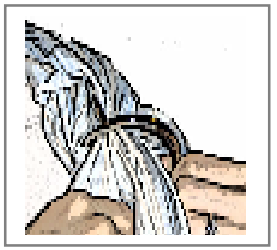
Letting your baby share the rhythmic motion when your walk, talk, and curl up supported in the presence of your breath and heartbeat is a acknowledged way to promote parental bonding. Constantly carried and touched babies develop their senses faster, cry less, learn more, and thrive better because they are less bored, but more relaxed and secure. Insecurity makes us less able to cope with life's stress appropriately and we substitute by developing unhealthy addictions- everything from alcohol and drugs to over eating, over spending, over working, etc. Frequently carried babies can cope with stress better and are less prone to undesirable addictions as grown-ups.

HOW TO WEAR

Thread the tail through the two rings, back over the second ring and through the first ring. Form a "ring buckle". Pass sling over your head and rest the shoulder pad on your shoulder. Rings should be at the corsage position.



HOW TO ADJUST



To adjust the sling to a tighter position, lift baby with one hand to "unlock" the rings and pull down on tail with the other hand. To loose the sling, lift up on bottom of upper ring and pull down on pouch portion with other hand.

Rings buckle up the tail when two rings are in a parallel position. Buckle comes loose when you angle two rings.

No matter what carrying position you are using, make sure the sling is tighten up to having the baby on your waist for your comfort and spine health. In hip straddle position she will be sitting on your waist. In cradle positions, she will be snuggling to your chest and belly, not the lower abdomen.

CARRYING POSITIONS

CRADLE HOLD

Prepare the sling to hold your baby. First, fold the chest front fabric in half to make a deep pocket.. Bring your baby up and over the pocket. Slowly release baby into the sling. If adjustment is needed use one arm to hold the baby secure and the other hand to pull down on the tail to tighten the rails to support your baby.

LEGS OUT

Cradle hold for bigger babies is possible with this carrying position. While your baby enjoys the view and fresh air, you will need to hold on to the outside rail to form a safety bar. Only employ this position if your baby is cooperative.

POUCH CRADLE HOLD

Fold a pocket as above. Put the baby's full body in. Rest her head on the outside rail is she is crunched. Newborns love to be "swaddled" in a sling.

LYING DOWN

To place baby in horizontal position to sleep or nurse, loosen the tail to make plenty of room in the pouch where the baby lies. Make sure the rings stay high on the chest. Position the baby's head away from the rings. Pull fabric up for discreet nursing or to shade your baby's eyes from sun or to shield her from cold wind.

FOOTBALL HOLD

This is a nursing position for the early months. In a cradle hold position, simply shift baby to one side under the arm. Adjust tightness and help latch-on. This position can help baby to suck better and maintain proper latch-on longer.

FULL COVERAGE HOLD

Nursing and napping are made comfortable and discrete under this position. Latch on at normal cradle hold position. Adjust the fabric to shield the light or cover up for privacy. Always use one hand to secure proper position.

LAY DOWN TO SLEEP

Sling can be removed without waking the baby by simply loosing the tail, lying the baby down and backing out of the sling.

KANGAROO

To sit your baby facing forward, form a pocket shape, and then cross baby's legs to sit down in pouch. Your baby's head rests against the centre of your chest and he should ride at your waist or higher.

HIP STRADDLE

This is the position for bigger babies of one months or older. It's the most popular position during all the baby carrying years, especially for toddler. Be sure the weight is borne on your hip.

SNUGGLE HOLD

It's also called "Tummy to tummy". Little infants can put legs in the pouch, while larger babies can let the legs out. Tighten tail to snug. Lite-on-Shoulder's "pouch seat" design provides a perfect grip for the baby's thighs. You can be assured of no slipping problem when holding in this position. Lots of times moms also found this position facilitate improvised nursing.

PIGGYBACK

Try this position for multitasking, but only after your baby is 10 months old. Put your baby in the hip straddle position, then keep sliding his hip together with the sling towards your back. Have the baby rest at just above waist level. Adjust sling by pulling on the tail if needed. Shopping with a toddler can be nerve-racking. By wearing the baby on the back, you can keep him from getting into
